

CHAPMAN SHAKEN OUT, SHEEHAN IN.

The Tenderloin Gets a New Czar from the Kingsbridge Station.

SHEEHAN VINDICATED.

Chief McCullagh Transfers Eleven Captains for the Good of the Service.

KILLILEA GOES TO OLD SLIP.

The Force Chuckles and Predicts the End When It Hears That Chapman Is Sent to Mercer Street.

The first big "shake-up" under the reign of Chief McCullagh took place yesterday morning.

In it nine full and two acting captains were shuffled around on the police chess board, the longest jump being given to Killilea, who is sent from Highbridge to Old Slip.

But while Killilea's change is the longest, the hardest and suddenest and saddest and most jarring is that put upon Chapman.
He was sent from the Tenderloin back to his old place in Mercer street. As a matter universally expressed opinion of his fellow officers he might just as well have been "hit on the head with an axe."

"Not only has the crown of Czarship been torn from his throbbing brow," said a sergeant of some learning, "but his swanlike neck has been shaved and maintained for insertion beneath the Police Board guillotine."
"It's all over but the purchase of grape," said another official. "Poor Chappie will be up under a mass of oranges in less than six months, and even the help of the gentleman who hoped to find through him an other gentleman at the Seelye dinner will be of no avail."

"My advice to him," said still another gold-striped gentleman, "is to retire quickly and go out ahead of the main body of the company he takes such an interest in. The reputation he has acquired in the last year ought to be worth $100 a year, to him and the economy of the city."

The reason for all these dismal (to Chapman) predictions is that the Mercer Street Precinct, to which he has been assigned, is the very easiest in town in which to work up charges of dereliction of duty against the commanding officer.

Chief McCullagh was asked specially about the transfer of Chapman, but he said nothing more than that his move had, like the other ten, been made "for the good of the service." The chief makes a special point that he has seen the two acting captains to the least important districts.

"I don't believe," said he, "in this 'acting' idea. A man with an acting commission cannot command the same respect and therefore get the same work out of this men as can a fully commissioned officer.
Both acting and full commissions are good things, but I want full commissions in control of big precincts."

The successor of "the Czar" is Captain Michael Sheehan, who has been rusticated at Kingsbridge since his trial for permitting policy to flourish in the Forty-seventh street station precinct was ended before the Police Commissioners.

With the summing up of the week case presented there and with the conviction for perjury in the Central Branch of the Supreme Court of the principal witness against him, the Board at last Wednesday's meeting dismissed the charges and this appointment to the most famous and most difficult precinct in the Metropolis is his final vindication.

Sheehan is one of the old school policemen. He first came out of the ranks in the Tenderloin, where, as sergeant under Schmittberger, he did a lot of clever work.
Bymes, McLaughlin, and others were always friendly toward him, and he is warmly backed by Mayor Strong. He was one of the first of Roosevelt's promotions.
As a Commissioner he has been the active part in getting up the policy case against Sheehan, even advancing to Policemen Waters, of his office, the funds necessary to get the negro complainants who stultified themselves. Sheehan's big promotion is looked upon by those interested in police affairs as a direct rebuff to Mr. Parker, as a notification, in fact, that three Commissioners and a Chief can do pretty much as they choose, regardless of his likes or dislikes.

It is significant, too, by the way, that several other "old-time" captains have gotten the best of the "shake-up."

Chapman apparently felt deeply his removal from the calcium light. He put a brave front upon it, however.

"I don't care a darn," said he, "if I am changed. I guess I'll have less trouble in Mercer street than I had in the Tenderloin."

He gave no sign if he heard a captain near him mutter, "Guess again."

Sheehan was simply overjoyed at his good luck. He beamed like an Italian sunrise as he said: "I am agreeably surprised.
I know it's a hard precinct, because I've been in it, but I'll make it work harder than ever to make a record there."

AMAZED BY MOUNTAINS.
Comical Surprise of a Kansas Man on His Way to New York.

Frank Gaylord, a Kansas man, who arrived in the city yesterday via the Lehigh road, and who, until this trip eastward, had never been out of sight of his native Kansas plains, greatly amused by his native remarks a New Yorker who sat in front of him in the car as the train wound through and over the mountains between Wilkes-barre and Mauch Chunk. "Nothing in his previous experience or that he had read had prepared him for a realization of what mountains are."

"Say," he whispered, hoarsely, "this can't be western Colorado, and I've heard tell that's pretty blamed bad. Ain't this the worst in the United States?"

The New Yorker assured him that there were regions that were considered more mountainous than that, but the Kansas man eyed him with a look of doubt.

"Oh, you're joking," he sensed forward again. "Say, there ain't enough level land to whip a good-sized dog in, is there?"

After that, there was a longer pause.
Then came the hoarse whisper once more.
"Say, they tell me there used to be a mighty sight of Indians round here. But they said they ever drove 'em away for that's what I'd like to know! Whoever wanted to take these blamed mountains away from 'em?"

"Say," it was after fully half an hour of amazed wonder that he leaned forward again and again whispered hoarsely in the New Yorker's ear.

"Say," how do the people ever manage to make their way around here, from one place to another? This must follow the gorges and valleys, eh? For they can't climb the mountains, that's sure. Yes, they must just creep around in the valleys and never climb over the hills."

Add with that he sank back in his seat and remained in a condition of semi-collapse until Jersey City was reached.
